YHWH knew that some day the Yisraelites would ask him for a king, so he told them some rules for any king that would rule in Yisrael. He could not have lots of wives because that could turn him away from YHWH. He could not greatly increase gold and silver for himself. He could not have too many horses because he might return the people to Mitzrayim so that he could get more. He was to write two copies of the Torah and read it every day to keep him from turning away from any commandments.

Three cities of refuge were to be built. People that accidentally killed someone could go there for protection from family members of the dead person.

If a person was killed in a field and nobody knew who killed him, the elders of the nearest city would kill a heifer and wash their hands over it, saying that their hands didn't shed the blood and that they did not see it happen.
